UTAH DISPUTE RESOLUTION (UDR) is celebrating its 25th year as a provider of high quality and affordable mediation and conciliation services to families and communities in Utah. The community is invited to help mark this milestone at a UDR Open House on Thursday, April 27, from 5 to 8 pm at the Law and Justice Center (645 South 200 East) in Salt Lake City.

The celebration will feature great food and beverages, live music, and mixing and mingling with UDR staff, board, donors and volunteer mediators – and with Utah citizens who have benefited from UDR’s Alternative Dispute Resolution services over the past quarter century.

UDR provides family and community mediation services at low or no cost to middle- and low-income Utahans. As the longest continuously running provider of court-approved mediation training in Utah, it trains individuals and develops customized workshops for companies and organizations who want to improve conflict management skills for their staffs and constituents.

In addition, UDR offers public seminars that address numerous topics related to conflict resolution and mediation.

Mediation is a voluntary, collaborative approach to resolving disputes. Trained mediators help people who are in conflict understand and express their needs and interests, and develop win-win solutions in a safe and supportive environment.
